TRURO DENTIST TAKES OVER PRACTICE WITH LLOYDS BANK SUPPORT

A Truro dentist has taken over a private dental practice business with the support of Lloyds Bank Commercial Banking.

David Brookes, a dentist with more than a decade of experience in the field, secured a six-figure loan from Lloyds Bank to purchase Roseland Dental on Fore Street.

The dental practice, established in 1984, was for sale following the retirement of the previous owner. The loan allowed David to buy the business and its freehold premises.

The practice will offer a range of services from simple procedures to more advanced treatments like dental implants.

Roseland Dental currently employs four people to work alongside David, and is looking to increase the team as the business grows.

David Brookes, owner of Roseland Dental, said: "I wanted to create a comprehensive, general dental practice that provides high-quality treatments. The support from Lloyds Bank has been invaluable in helping me to achieve this vision and buy Roseland Dental.

"We've already got 1,000 registered patients and we're hoping to increase this as we continue to build on the surgery's reputation for expert dental care in the area."

Mike Craigie, relationship manager at Lloyds Bank Commercial Banking, said: "As the only dental practice in Tregony, David is helping to meet a demand for private dental treatments in the area by taking over Roseland Dental. Our experience of supporting businesses in the healthcare sector leaves us well-placed to help David achieve his business vision.

"We're committed to helping Britain prosper, and to underline this, we have pledged to grow our SME net lending by at least £1billion until the end of 2017."
